Goes Among His Soldiers in Humble Guise, Often to Their Discomfiture.

MILAN. Italy, June 3.—The King's his subjects in an awkward position his subjects in an awkward position. He will chat to soldiers for some time before they discover to whom they are talking.

One night recently a man of fifty, in the uniform of a regiment of the line, asked some territorials, who were camping out, for a place to sleep. They told him to come and sit by their camping, but teased him, thinking he was one of those volunteers who go to the front full of enthusiasm and soon grow tired of the hardships. Some rough joking went on for some time, when one of the soldiers, by the light of the fire, recognized in the modest soldier-tramp the King of Italy.

"It is his majesty!" he cried, in consternation.

"It is his majesty!" he cried, in consternation.

They offered to give up a tent for him, but he declined, and slept quite soundly side by side with two territorials.

Many stories go through the firing lines about the King—how he shares a simple meal with one soldier, scolds another, encourages a third. He writes home that he never felt better in his life, and means to share the life of his troops till the end of the war. His example has done much to make the war popular in Italy, besides silencing many who before characterized him as merely a figurehead.

Movies to Photograph Mexican Activities

Representatives of the leading motion picture concerns have made arrangements to send operators into Mexico and ments to send operators into Mexico and with the army and navy to film the activities of the army and the fleet.

Secretary Daniels gave permission to put a man on a naval vessel at Vera Cruz. The committee asked Secretary Baker to permit two camera men and a mechanician to go into Mexico by motor and take pictures of the army at work. It was represented that this would not only be of interest to 40,000,000 motion picture attendants weekly, but it would be valuable to the recruiting campaigns of the army and navy. of the army and navy.

for service; but there is general disposition to serve if real need shall arise.

Without much doubt, a call for volunteers, possibly up to 200,000, will be issued within a few days following any circumstance that makes an aggressive campaign in Mexico certain. Congressional opinion is impressively united on this point, though there is wide divergence of view as to the reasons. Some people insist that a real Mexican campaign will make 500,000 troops necessary. Others think it will be mere political play to call for such a force. No difference. The belief is almost unanimous, seemingly, that a crisis will be followed by a call for volunteers in big force.

One impression that would be highly interceting if the reasons for it could be traced to authoritative information is that Mexico will be made a pretext for raising bigger army than Congress would authorize, because of the feefing that Europe may present us with conditions that will make such an army highly desirable.

Personal Relations Interest.

Personal Relations Interest.

The thing that interests legislators nost intimately is their personal relations to a big volunteer or militia The other day Senator Wadsresigned as an officer in the New York national guard because he couldn't be Senator and soldier at the same time. Perhaps it would have sounded fine, heroic and self-sacrificing if he had left the benste and gone off to fight. But it wasn't practicable. Too many political and, it might almost be said, dynastic interests required that a young man just starting on a Senatorial term stick at that post. The organization, the friends, satellites and interests that railied to make him a Senator couldn't hear of his resigning. It would have compelled the election of two Senators in the Empire State this year, with endless complications. Republican party leaders considered that assured Senatorial vote vastly more important than anything else. So Mr. Wadsworth remains in his place.

On the other hand Congressman Chiperfield of Illinois has announced he will resign from Congress to serve with the guard. Mr. Chiperfield is Republican Congressman at large; has been twenty years in the Illinois guard; and is now judge advocate general with the rank of lieutenant colonel. He raised a regiment in the Spanish war and tendered it to the Government, but it was not accepted. Congressman Tilson of Connecticut has already joined his command. He served in the Spanish war as an officer, has remained in the Connecticut puard ever since, and is now a lieutenant colonel.

In that case the militia officer occupled a different status than if he had been in a State's national guard. The tory; but a State is not. If, then, he had been a major in the national guard of a State he might have continued in Congress. But as soon as the State guard is mustered into Federal service he must resign from Congress or from

There is quite a long list of members of Congress—most of them in the House—who are doing quite a bit of worrying these days about whether they ought to retain their seats, or resign and go into the military service.

The number includes several graduates of West Point and Annapolis, officers of National Guard organizations former officers of army or navy, and a considerable number of veterans of the Spanish-American war. Not nearly all of them are under any obligation for service; but there is general disposition to serve if real need shall arise.

Without much doubt, a call for volunteers, possibly up to 200,600, will be issued within a few days following any circumstance that makes an aggressive campaign in Mexico certain. Congressional opinion is impressively united on this point, though there is wide divergence of view as to the reasons. Some people insist that a real Mexican campaign will make 500.

Case of General Wheeler.

The subject, in short, was perfectly simple until Spanish war times. Then Gen. Joe Wheeler, being in Congress

Gen. Joe Wheeler, being in Congress when the war started, accepted a commission. He did not resign, and the House did not declare his sea vacant; but he drew no pay and did not serve in Congress while he was in the army. He returned to his seat only after he had been nustered out of the military, and the House permitted him to resume the seat.

During that time his district had no Congressman. It was willing. Most districts would not be, and the case is generally looked upon as an amiable irregularity. It would have been possible to force a vacation of the seat if anybody had cared to press the matter. It wasn't pressed, because Wheeler, an exconfederate and very popular was a picturesque figure: everybody was pleased at the reunion of "Blue and Gray" in the common cause, and the thing caused no criticism except by people who didn't like the precedent. As a precedent it was bad business, and it would make considerable trouble now if a considerable military operation should be required.
